Olympus introduces the new DT20 because it feels right in how it uses space. It's worth looking for in the office maybe under the Christmas tree. The DT20 is a clock you can customize with your own photos onto the face of this timepiece. If the DT20 is all about the photos, the Moon Face shown above is all about the photos. This is a clock where the face turns full circle as the clock ticks away. And for the first time on a timepiece we've seen the circle contains a full moon face rather than just the half moon around the dial. During the darkening moon from night to day, we gradually see the very full moon. At the still point of midnight there is a custom moon face centered on the dial. For the rest of the time, the moon comes in and out of the circle of the moon face. The biggest feature of Lightroom 5 is its new, unified cloud album. In the past, the program needed to be reinstalled to access the album. Now, that album access can be done from any computer, and some of its features, like keyword tagging or automatic sorting, are directly available. It's a completely new and powerful way of storing pictures, with a simple and user-friendly interface to navigate. Another feature that has made it to the new version is a comprehensive editing module for adjusting layers. Drag & tools, like arrows and paint buckets, are used to select and manipulate the contents of layers. However, sometimes it is not possible to select something, and the Adobe Assistant can help: it analyzes the picture and suggests what and where to edit.

Color mixing allows you to change the colors of specific pixels by combining duplicate pixel information in a single, group color, or create a unique color. You should not attempt to apply this function when the image has anti-aliasing or any other pixel smoothing options active. Color can also be applied wholesale from one area of your artwork to another. This will likely help you achieve a more uniform color scheme in the other areas of your document, especially if you incorporate a single hue or similar-related hue. If you use Live Clip or Quick Fix to adjust colors, the stage setter will retain all changes and changes will occur on the current layer—so be judicious in which layers you modify. The Duplicate & Diffuse option allows the duplication of an individual color and the diffusing of similar colors into a group. You can choose to diffuse the color with the brush, or a different outline color. The result is a more dynamic softening option that has few limitations, yet provides the equations necessary to create subtle, realistic color transitions. Alternatively, you may be able to use the hue function and select the Hue and Saturation sliders to adjust the saturation and hue of the pixels. The 3D Tools options enable you to create perspective-corrected 3D effects in your artwork. You can also use this tool to add or subtract depth to your image to improve perspective and bring a 3D type of feel to your images. This tool is perfect for creating the illusion of space or creating dimensional effects. e3d0a04c9c
